ADMINISTRATION

An Invitation from President Andreasen

Dear Friends,

In our lives as Christians, one of the most important books we can own and read is the Bible. For our students who are about to join us this fall, the same is true. Of all the textbooks they will buy and study while they are here at Andrews University, perhaps the most important textbook they can—and should—own is the Bible itself.

I'm pleased that this summer, our Andrews University Press was able to release the Andrews Study Bible. Now, along with the Press, Andrews University has embarked upon a project we feel is important for each one of our new freshmen this year. I'd like to invite you to join with me in sponsoring Bibles for each of our 400+ freshmen who will be coming in just under a month.

This year, part of our Fall Fellowship, August 13–15, will focus upon the importance of the Word and the Light, Depth and Truth it brings to our lives. I'd like to personally invite you and your family to attend our annual Fall Fellowship weekend. Visit www.andrews.edu/rsvp/fallfellowship/ to see a full schedule of events and to RSVP for meals. Also, beginning now through Fall Fellowship weekend, please consider giving to the Bibles for Freshmen campaign. Andrews University Press is offering the bibles at a discounted rate and you—the faculty and staff of Andrews University—can sponsor one or as many bibles as you like for $25 each. Learn more about how to donate by visiting <http://www.andrews.edu/agenda/keywords/andrews+bible>. At this same link, you can also follow the progress of the campaign. Then, during Fall Fellowship weekend, the Bibles for Freshmen project will be the focus of a special dedication time during Dwight K. Nelson's Sabbath morning sermon.

Once more, we have a wonderful opportunity to place in the hands of each new freshman this year a book that can and will change their lives as they seek to change the world as graduates of Andrews University.

Most cordially,

Niels-Erik Andreasen
President

Students Study Shakespeare

For the month of June, 12 English undergraduate and graduate students embarked on an intensive study of William Shakespeare in performance (ENGL425/525). The course began with an on-campus week of preparation in which students read four plays, the primary source material for those plays, and the major works of secondary criticism discussing those dramas. For the second week of class, the students traveled with L. Monique Pittman, associate professor of English, and her husband, Paul D. Smith Jr., the tour driver, to the Stratford Shakespeare Festival of Canada. There, the group saw four performances, toured the Festival Theatre backstage area, and tried on costumes at the Costume Warehouse. Pittman says, "One of the highlights of the Stratford experience was seeing respected actor Christopher Plummer in the role of Prospero in a production of The Tempest." Following a performance, Plummer posed for a picture with Andrews students at the stage door. Classes took place all week in Stratford, including over dinner and in the hotel conference room when students discussed performances and studied the production history of each play viewed. The final week of formal classes was held back on-campus where students were required to write a paper examining one of the productions. Previous offerings of this course have resulted in scholarly conference presentations, Honors Thesis projects, and graduate student project papers. Pittman concludes, "The students and faculty sponsors of the June 2010 course enjoyed a demanding but rewarding three weeks of learning together."

Young Artists Guild Brings Younger Students to Campus

For one week in July, young artists were given an opportunity to cultivate their artistic talents by participating in the Young Artists Guild. This five-day summer drawing experience facilitated the development of some foundational drawing skills for two age groups: 8–11-year-olds and 12–15-year-olds. Taught by Brian Manley, assistant professor of art, students experienced working with pencils and charcoal. The classes were held in the Art & Design Center at Andrews University. This is the second year Manley has offered the class. "I really enjoy interacting with the kids and I hope to continue to offer the Young Artists Guild in the years to come," says Manley.

At the Michigan Botanical Club's May meeting, David Steen, professor of biology, was awarded the club's Outstanding Member Award 2010 for his long-term service as treasurer of the organization. The award is given once each year to members who have greatly contributed to the benefit of botany in the state of Michigan.

Bookstore Recycles for ADRA

A permanent collection box has been installed at the Andrews Bookstore for One Planet, a recycling program that accepts any outdated or out-of-print textbooks. Missouri Book Systems (MBS), a used textbook supplier, created the initiative and chose to partner with the Andrews Bookstore, one of many participating bookstores nationwide. "They'll take any textbook that is no longer of any value. They actually crop the book and recycle the paper separate from the hard cover," said Swanson. All types of textbooks are accepted but the recycling program cannot accept magazines or newspapers. The Bookstore will sort through and repackage all submissions before sending them off to MBS, who covers the shipping costs. For every box of books the Bookstore ships, MBS donates $10 toward a charity of their choice. Because of the University's diversity, the Bookstore has chosen the Adventist Development and Relief Agency (ADRA), which helps everybody, all over the world, says Swanson. She also encourages faculty who have old, unwanted books to donate. "There are professors and other people on campus who have books. It's not just the students," said Swanson. "If one person recycles their book, that might be ineffective, but it's not if 3,500 students each recycle one book." Since the program officially launched in February of 2010, Swanson has received donations from area businesses and even as far away as Holland. As of the end of June, Andrews University had recycled 150 boxes of books. Twice a year, the Bookstore donates the proceeds to ADRA. Learn more about the One Planet program by visiting www.oneplanetbooks.com.

OFFICE OF INTEGRATED MARKETING & COMMUNICATION

Staffing Transitions at IMC

The Office of Integrated Marketing & Communication has experienced significant staffing changes over the summer, which may affect service to the campus. We extend our congratulations and best wishes to Justin Jeffery, former print communications manager, who married Michaela Lawrence on July 18, and moved to Knoxville, Tenn., where Michaela is employed by the Georgia-Cumberland Conference. Justin will continue to do contract work for IMC while we search for a replacement. Andre Morgan, web developer, left employment on July 6 to relocate to Chicago where he joined Fry.com, a company that provides e-Commerce expertise and technical solutions. We appreciate his three years of service and wish him well. Andre’s former position has been posted and we are actively searching for a replacement. Cherry Bayley, our first-ever project manager, after her brief but productive tenure at IMC, made the personal decision to leave full-time employment to spend more time with her family. Ian Roberts-Clarke will start work as IMC’s new project manager on August 15. Thank you for keeping these personnel searches in your prayers.

Remember to Utilize Design and Editorial Style Guides

As you are preparing materials for the beginning of the school year, please remember the resources available to you in the Editorial Style Guide and Brand Architecture by clicking on “Branding & Identity” at www.andrews.edu/imc. Call IMC if you need further clarification or assistance.

SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE

Demsky Compiles Waldensian Tour Guide

Kathleen Demsky, assistant professor of library science, has recently compiled a Waldensian Tour Guide to accompany the religion course “Special Topics in Waldensian Beliefs.” The summer tour spends nine days in Europe studying the history and faith of the Waldenses, as well as the ornate architecture of the area in contrast with the simple Waldensian buildings. The guidebook delineates the history of the various sites throughout the area surrounding Torino, Italy, and re-imagines the stories of the martyrs. The tour’s goal is to illustrate the contrast between a Christ-centered life and one centered on human principles by comparing the architecture of the Waldenses and the Catholic architecture.

Now Offering an Online MBA

The Andrews University School of Business Administration will be offering an online Master of Business Administration (MBA) beginning in August 2010. The online program mirrors the on-campus graduate degree and was designed with the convenience of its students in mind. The program will consist of 11 courses (three credits each) and can be completed in a minimum of two years (with all prerequisites met). The last two courses must be taken as a three-week intensive on the campus of Andrews University and will culminate with graduation exercises. The mission of the program is to prepare students to hold responsible positions in domestic and international business, in government and for non-profit organizations. SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

Graduate Students Provide Free Tutoring

During the month of July, 17 area school children benefitted from free tutoring, thanks to graduate students in the special education course SPED617—Developmentally Appropriate Instruction. Seventeen children ages 6–13 received free tutoring Monday–Thursdays for three consecutive weeks. Four graduate students participated. Nina Elmendorf-Steele, assistant professor of special education and school psychology and special education program coordinator, says, “There was no set curriculum and no budget but there was a lot of enthusiasm.” The four participating student teachers experienced putting “theory to practice” by providing small-group tutoring instruction. They were involved in every phase of the process of designing and implementing differentiated instructional educational components based on each student’s needs. From the selection of applicants, designing individual curriculums, initial assessment, participation in child study teams, preparing lesson plans, executing instruction, evaluation and written reports—each student teacher met the challenges with great skill and creativity according to Elmendorf-Steele. She says, “The children were eager to come each day, and strong bonds were established as the student teachers carefully nurtured the children in affirmation of what they knew along with encouragement to stretch their learning.”

The counseling center is staffed by licensed psychologists, counselors and graduate interns.

Department of Teaching, Learning & Curriculum Faculty and Students Present Papers at AERA

Five members in the Department of Teaching, Learning & Curriculum had papers accepted for presentation at the 91st Annual Meeting of the American Educational Research Association (AERA). The conference took place in Denver, Colo., April 29–May 4, 2010. This year, the conference welcomed over 13,000 participants from the United States and over 60 countries. Dialogue revolved around the theme “Understanding Complex Ecologies in a Changing World.” A variety of program formats such as the traditional paper presentation, invited presentations, roundtable presentations, symposia, demonstration sessions, poster presentations, and more provided participants with an intricate look at how learning takes place and is contextualized across the range of human experience. The following individuals attended to present their papers: Larry Burton, chair and professor of teacher education; Josephine Katenga, doctoral candidate; Wanli Xing, graduate student, University of Missouri, Columbia;

Giny Lonser, doctoral candidate, and Faith-Ann McGarrell, assistant professor of curriculum & instruction. Burton presented, “Constructing STEM theory from a faith-based case” and “Meeting the needs of diverse STEM learners: The power of relationship.” McGarrell presented, “Bridging the Gap: A model for reflection in academic service-learning in first-year writing.” In addition to those who presented, several other graduate students, alumni, former students and School of Education faculty were in attendance. On Sabbath, participants and attendees enjoyed a day of warm fellowship and dynamic worship with John Cress, an AU alum, and members of the Lifesource Adventist Fellowship of the Denver First Church.

Berrien County School Superintendents Visit Andrews

On May 14, Dean Jim Jeffery and Dave Faehner, vice-president for University Advancement, met with 17 school superintendents from Berrien County. Jeff Siegel, the head superintendant of this group, is in charge of the RESA leadership from the Berrien Leadership Students Experience International Classroom: For two weeks in June, 29 students in the Department of Leadership & Educational Administration traveled to China and Japan as part of an Asian study tour. The tour is designed to introduce students to the international and comparative dimensions of higher education through a study tour program. The participants were introduced to a cross-cultural perspective and a global vision of the challenges of higher education around the world, including Seventh-day Adventist institutions. The trip included interaction with students at Peking University, Shanghai Jiaotong University, Zhejiang University in Hangzhou, University of Tokyo, and Saniku Gakuin Adventist College. The universities were chosen from the best universities of China and Japan. The students were also exposed to the spectacular culture of Asia, visiting museums and historical places in Beijing, Shanghai, Yokohama, Tokyo, and nearby cities. They also visited the Imperial Palace in the Forbidden City, the Great Wall, the Olympic National Stadium in Beijing, different temples, and an authentic Japanese hotel.

Springs Regional Education Service Agency (RESA). The purpose of this meeting was to introduce all Berrien County superintendents to Andrews University. In addition, they were also given an overview of the Department of Leadership & Educational Administration's graduate programs in K–12 Education and Higher Education. The superintendents were surprised and very pleased to learn of the School of Education's number one ranking in Michigan for their Teacher Prep Program three years in a row. Faehner says, "The superintendents were extremely pleased Andrews invited them to come. They had had a great time and would love to come again."

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Introducing New Dual MDiv/MSW Degree

The Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary and the Department of Social Work are now offering a new dual graduate degree, a Master of Divinity/Master of Social Work, beginning in the fall semester of 2010. The new dual MDiv/MSW degree will prepare students for service in occupations where social work and the pastoral mission of the church intersect. It is the only collaborative program of its kind within the Seventh-day Adventist Church and only one of 15 throughout the United States. The program is designed to give students an integrated approach to both theology and social work. It is structured to prepare students for types of ministry where clinical and administrative skills in both social work and theology are needed. Students can choose to complete a dual degree or an emphasis in either social work or Christian ministry. Learn more at www.andrews.edu/news.

First Students Complete Andrews University Doctor of Ministry in Africa

The summer of 2010 marked the graduation of the first Doctor of Ministry students who received a degree from Andrews University's Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary, yet completed all of their studies while still in Africa. This was a historical first for Andrews University and for the Adventist Church on the African continent. It started in the summer of 2006 when the Andrews University Department of World Mission partnered with the West-Central Africa Division of Seventh-day Adventists to launch a Doctor of Ministry cohort in Global Mission Leadership. In this cohort were 34 students from that division who met for their first session at Babcock University in Nigeria. The students represented church leaders from West Central Africa, a group who did not have to leave their homes and travel around the world to study.

From the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary's Department of World Mission, Bruce Bauer, chair and professor of world mission, along with Rudi Maier, professor of mission;

Gorden Doss, associate professor of world mission; and Jon Dybdahl, adjunct professor of spiritual formation and mission, ushered the students through this four-year process. Bauer and Maier were with the group at Babcock University for three of the four summers. This is the Department of World Mission's third overseas cohort in global mission leadership training. An earlier cohort with 24 students graduated in India in 1999, where sessions were held at Spicer Memorial College. The second group came mainly from the Trans-European Division and met annually at Newbold College in England. From that cohort, 14 students graduated in 2005. Read more at www.andrews.edu/news.
